Accurately exchange information about buying things in communicative situations.

Can Do Statements

- I can use basic instructions in advertising.
- I can ask and say where places are.

Ask your partner:

- What items do you buy when they are on sale?
- When are the best sales of the year?

Let's Explore!

Are you a great shopper? Let's find out!

* A "shopper" is a person who buys things in a store.

John: Well, not really.

Marketer: Of course you are. Are you looking for a bargain? Don't miss out! It's sale time at Hamptons, your new store for fashion!

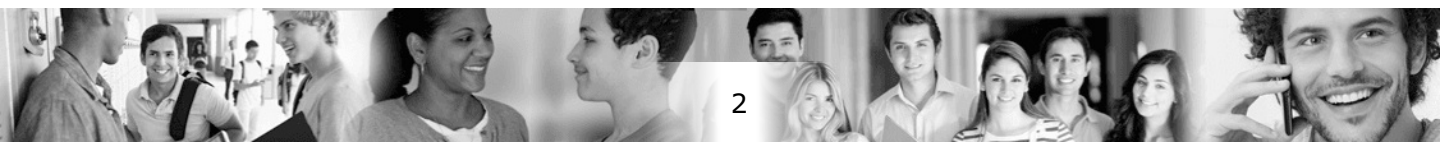

John: Hamptons? That's an expensive store.

Marketer: Not at all, honey! It's cheap!

Sally: Where is the store?

Marketer: Just go down here and make a left at the second street. Here, take this flyer!

Sally: Need to buy a new dress? Choose from a wide selection, all sizes, $29.99 to $99.99, in all colors from yellow to black. Looking for sandals and sneakers? Imperatives in Advertising

You use the Imperative form to give an order, a warning or advice, and to make a request.

To make the Imperative, you use the base form of the verb. You do not use a subject.

Advertisers (newspapers, magazines, radio or TV advertisements) often use Imperatives to create excitement.
